

The diagram illustrates the difference between a single-pass and a two-pass coding process. The top row shows a single-pass process where the final output is a small purple block. The bottom row shows a two-pass process where the final output is a larger purple block. The diagram uses vertical bars of different colors (purple, black, orange) and arrows to represent the flow of data through the coding process.

